01 Who You're Meeting

Sridhar Ramaswamy — Chief Executive Officer, Snowflake.

The company: Product revenue accelerated from 26% growth in Q1 FY2026 to 34% by Q1 FY2027, with RPO up 42% to $9.77B and net revenue retention at 125%. Snowflake Intelligence reached over 2,500 accounts within three months of launch — the fastest adoption ramp in the company's history.

What they sell: The AI Data Cloud — cross-cloud data warehousing, sharing and governance — with Cortex AI, Cortex Code (a coding agent), and Snowflake Intelligence (an enterprise agentic application) on top. Observe adds observability; TensorStax strengthens AI-driven data engineering.

02 Where The Company Sits

Ramaswamy's thesis is worth quoting in substance because it is the clearest articulation of the data-layer argument: no AI model helps if there are four sources of enterprise truth, and there are at least three or four credible model providers, all of which Snowflake works with. The differentiation is packaging governance, auditability and access control into something usable.

03 What To Pressure-Test

- Consumption pricing makes revenue inherently more volatile than subscription models, in both directions
- Competing directly with Databricks, which is growing faster at over 80% and is larger by run rate
- Non-GAAP operating margin of only 10.5% in FY2026, expanding to a guided 12.5% — thin against subscription peers
- The $6B AWS commitment is a substantial fixed obligation for a company whose revenue flexes with customer usage

04 GIP Context

GIP: No publicly disclosed GIP relationship. Relevance sits in the Data Foundation and Workflows prerequisite — whether a PortCo has a governed single source of truth before any AI programme starts. Consumption pricing means cost governance should be designed in from the outset rather than retrofitted.

BlackRock: No publicly disclosed operating relationship; standard index holdings of SNOW only.
