01 Who You're Meeting

Aparna C. Iyer — Chief Financial Officer, Wipro.

The company: The slowest-growing of the India-heritage integrators tracked here, with Q1 FY2027 IT services revenue up just 0.9% at constant currency and declining sequentially. Its response is a structural one — a new AI Native Business and Platforms unit pivoting to a services-as-a-software model.

What they sell: IT and consulting services across applications, infrastructure, engineering and business process operations, with Wipro Intelligence as the AI programme — industry platforms, the Winx and Vega delivery platforms, and an Innovation Network with labs in the US, Australia and the Middle East.

02 Where The Company Sits

The services-as-a-software pivot is the most explicit statement by any integrator in this app that the old model is finished. Selling outcomes delivered by platforms rather than hours delivered by people changes the commercial conversation fundamentally, and for a portfolio owner that is the direction to push every services vendor toward. Pallia's observation that AI has become a standing board-level mandate at many organisations matches what the reference model assumes about executive sponsorship.

03 What To Pressure-Test

- Q1 FY2027 IT services revenue grew just 0.9% at constant currency and fell 1.2% sequentially — the weakest in its peer set
- Operating margin fell 1.2 points to 16% on salary increases, large-deal ramp-ups and AI investment
- Americas 2 revenue declined 7.3% year over year and 2.5% sequentially
- Q2 FY2027 guidance of -1.5% to +0.5% constant currency contemplates further contraction

04 GIP Context

GIP: No publicly disclosed GIP relationship. Most likely to appear as an incumbent at a PortCo with an existing applications or infrastructure contract. The Olam Group deal signals an appetite for large strategic agreements, which may make Wipro commercially aggressive on portfolio-scale opportunities.

BlackRock: No publicly disclosed operating relationship.

Others at Wipro: Srinivas Pallia (Chief Executive Officer & Managing Director); Rishad A. Premji (Executive Chairman)
