01 Who You're Meeting

Carl Eschenbach — Chief Executive Officer, Workday.

The company: Subscription revenue grew from $7.7B to $8.8B in FY2026, with subscription backlog of $25.96B, up 17%. More than 75% of core customers use Workday Illuminate, and over a billion AI actions ran on the platform during the year.

What they sell: A unified platform for human capital management and financial management, with Workday Illuminate as the AI layer and a growing set of Illuminate Agents. Workday Build is a new open developer platform letting customers and partners create and share AI-powered solutions on Workday.

02 Where The Company Sits

Workday's claim is data, not models: Illuminate is trained on what it describes as the largest and cleanest finance and HR dataset, with more than 75 million users under contract and a trillion transactions processed in a year. For a portfolio programme the relevant point is that HR and finance are the two functions every PortCo has regardless of sector, which makes Workday one of the few genuinely portfolio-wide plays in the Corporate Functions Efficiency area of the reference model.

03 What To Pressure-Test

- Subscription growth of roughly 14–15% is solid but not exceptional against ServiceNow at 24.5%
- $166M of restructuring expense in Q1 FY2026 pushed GAAP operating margin down to 1.8% for the quarter
- Four acquisitions in one year carries integration risk and makes organic growth harder to read
- Competes directly with SAP and Oracle, both of which bundle HCM and financials into wider estates

04 GIP Context

GIP: No publicly disclosed GIP relationship. HR and finance are universal across PortCos, so this is one of the more plausible candidates for consolidated portfolio-level licensing. Note that Salesforce is a long-standing Workday HCM customer, and both vendors are tracked here.

BlackRock: No publicly disclosed operating relationship; standard index holdings of WDAY only.
